City council passed a capital budget Monday of just more than $52 million.

The budget includes an array of road work, planning projects, addition to transit and public works fleet and equipment and community service projects, among other things.

Most directly affected by the public is capital road reconstruction projects that will take place across Sault Ste. Marie next year.

Capital road reconstruction projects for 2018 will include Bruce Street from Queen to Wellington; Black Road from Second to Third Line, Bay Street from Andrew to Pim Street and the widening of Black Road from McNabb Street to Second Line if connecting link funding is received.

Other projects include the second phase of the McNabb/Pim streets sewer project and the Fort Creek Aqueduct project.

City staff recommended that the Simpson Street reconstruction project be delayed one year in order to allow the streetscaping of Bruce and the reconstruction of Bay Street.

That move was questioned by Ward 2 Coun. Susan Myers who noted that Simpson Street is 100 years old and residents are concerned that the underground services are aging and in jeopardy because of a new subdivision built adjacent to the street.

Director of Engineering Don Elliott said there is not enough money in the budget to complete all three projects and it is recommended that the Simpson Street project be delayed one year.

The capital budget was approved in a 12-1 recorded vote. The lone opponent was Ward 6 Coun. Ozzie Grandinetti.
